A growing demand for adaptable office space

With higher rental costs and today's dynamic workforce we are seeing a growth in the demand for greater flexibility in office design. Adequately fitting into your current office space is one thing, allowing for growth or contraction throughout the term of your lease is another.

Investing in an adaptable office design is a means of offsetting the risk surrounding the growth or shrinkage of your business. Poor spatial planning can affect your business performance long term and have significant cost implications.

To meet this challenge and to make sure all the critical spatial issues have been considered Apex Executive Interiors continues to evolve its sophisticated spatial planning App.

Modern technology is one solution, however sometimes the best solutions don't come from calculations or algorithms but by drawing upon our extensive industry experience and coming up with simple cost effective ways to transform your working environment.

Dangerous find during an office fitout

An office inspection we completed recently revealed some very dangerous electrical work obviously done by an unlicensed person or a cowboy. The wiring had been joined using a push on 12 volt connector usually found in the automotive industry. Even more worrying are the bare wires that had been left exposed. Dangerous faults like the one pictured carry a high a risk of serious electric shock or death and are also a potential fire hazard.

Workplace electrical jobs should only be carried out by a licensed electrician, preferably one who specialises in commercial offices. You can be fined $22,000 as an individual or $110,000 as a company for doing unlicensed electrical work.
