

Be alert, not electrocuted

From the 1st of Jan 2013 the laws regarding Residual Current Devices [RCD's] also known as safety switches which are designed to shut of the power supply when there is a dangerous leak to earth changed. RCD's are now required to be fitted on all new and modified electrical circuits in your office fitout. Failure to comply could risk at the very least substantial fines for you and your staff or worse. There are specific rules regarding equipment that is frequently moved or subject to exposed conditions.

Apex Executive Interiors were proud to sponsor two commercial awards in the Real Estate Institute of New South Wales Awards for Excellence. The awards are judged by an independent panel of industry experts and give official recognition to the property industry's top performers for their initiatives. The winners set the benchmark for professional standards, creativity and a commitment to service in their specialist fields.

Steve Bruss of Apex Executive Interiors presented the award to the top Commercial Agency, CBRE along with the top Commercial Agent, Daniel O'Brien also of CBRE.

On trend

When showing your clients a new space, it is important to be aware that current workplaces strive to achieve more interaction and collaboration from their people. The right space enhances an employee's job satisfaction and improves retention of the right people.

More companies, both large and small, are realising that the way an office is designed makes a big difference to the productivity of their employees.

Some of the current interior design trends that can be incorporated into these new offices are:

Open-plan workspaces

These spaces foster collaboration between individuals and teams, and will continue to be a focus in 2014 and beyond.
